there be many immediate, ordinary, and houshould servants unto the French King, termed only, Secretaires, or Secretaires du roy, and sometimes Secretaires du Roy, & de la maison, & couronne de France, (although in truth they be not Officers of the Crown:) Of these did Charles the fifth institute a College, or Corporation, by the title of, Le College des Clercs, Notaires, & Secretaires du Roy, & de la maison, & Couronne de France: At which time there was but sixty of them, for the writing of all Patents, and dispatches of the Chauncery; and their entertainement but six shillings Parisis a day, besides ten pounds Tour. for their Droict de Manteaux, and some petty fees out of the Chauncery: But upon the increase of businesses, Lewis the eleventh doubled their number; and Henry the second, in the yeer 1554 raised it unto two hundred, giving them 300 l. wages, in respect of all fees. In the yeer 1570 Charles the ninth joyned unto them forty more; and Henry the third, in the yeer 1583, fourteen unto those, allowing them certaine vailes out of the Chauncery seale, and 150 l. wages. Henry the fourth added unto all these, first 22, then 23, then nine (entertained at 300 l. wages, without any vailes) and in the yeer 1603, twenty six, to whom he assigned 1000 l. a yeer (especially for such of them as attended the finances,) And lastly, in the yeer, 1608, he made ten more (which have 300 l. wages) in respect of the re-union of his own demaine unto the Crown. The King himselfe is the head of their College; they and their (legitimate) children are enobled: And besides exemption from all manner of taxations, customes, tolls, impositions, lones, fines of alienation, rights of Seigniory (for land held of the King;) and a discharge from the Ban, Arriereban, Musters, Harbingers, Estapes, and Salt-peter-men; and the being fee-free in all Courts of Justice; they enjoy many excellent privileges.

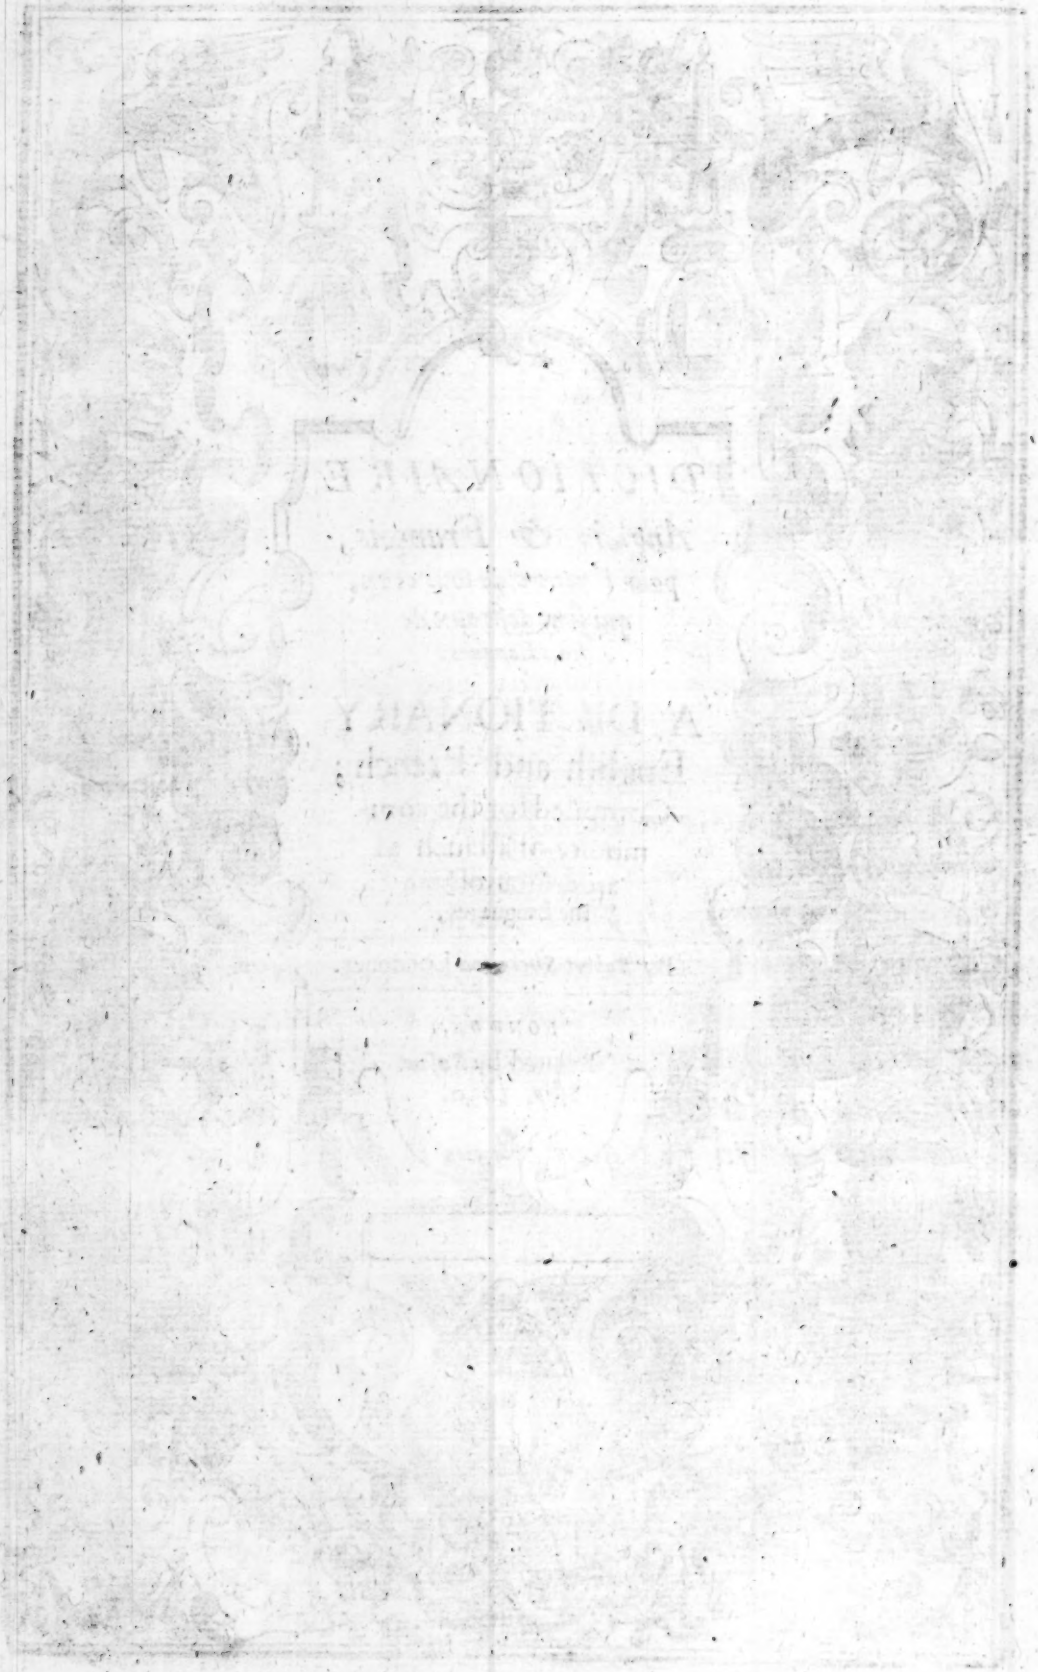
Iſlip. 1650.



AVX FAVORABLES Lecteurs François, Alemans, & autres.

MEssieurs ; n'ayant autre moyen de vous monstrer, combien je suis desireux de vous faire service, j'ay prins la hardiesse vous presenter ce mien petit labeur, lequel vous prendrez, s'il vous plaist, en gré : Oultre le Dictionaire, auquel je pense avoir comprins tous le mots, ou la plus grande partie, de la langue Angloise ; j'y ay mis à la fin, quelques courtes reigles, pour vous aider à prononcer icelle langue ; & aussi tous les Verbes anomales, que j'ay peu amasser. Je pourray avoir failli en quelques endroits : car ou trouvera-on, ça bas, tant de perfection, qu'il n'y a rien a dire ? Mais j'espere que les fautes ne sont de telle nature, qu'elles ne soyent facilement pardonnables, par vostre grande courtoisie ; a laquelle je me recommende.

R. S. de Londres.

TO THE
ENGLISH READER:

IT could not be expected in ſo ſmall a volume, as I was inforced to contract my ſelfe into, that (in this Engliſh Dictionary) I ſhould ſhew the Genders of all French Nounes, and the Conjugation of all French Verbes, which are moſt ſufficiently and at large already done by M. COTGRAVE; to whom I referre you. In giving the French interpretation to the Engliſh words, I have, for the moſt part, obſerved to ſet down firſt the Proper; then, the Tranſlated and Metaphoricall. Wherin, if yee ſhall reape that profit by my paines, as may procure your fauourable acceptance, I have my full wiſh.

ROBERT SHERVVOOD.

A Caution to the Reader.

IN this Engliſh-French Dictionary 'tis to be obſerv'd, that thoſe French words which are obſolete, and out of uſe, are printed in a Roman Letter, to diſtinguiſh them from thoſe words which are eſterling, and now current among the French Nation; all which are to be found in the Italic Letter. Moreover divers errors in the former Dictionary are rectified.
